Mr Saha, a graduate of Mangalore University, heads the design team of a company in Delhi who make handbags and hand luggage. The company he works for produces some 10,000 bags and 20,000 wallets each month, mainly for export. He originates many designs for customers of the company and also original designs to be sold under their brand name. When he saw the publicity for the Design-A-Bag contest he realised it would give him the opportunity to show one of his own original designs.

“I designed a bag that would contain everything a man would need for a business trip in a case small enough to be carried on a plane and fit under the seat in front.”, he said. “I called it ME. There is a combination of leather and canvas with the inside canvas holding compartments for clothing, toiletries, a laptop, etc. The front panel is leather to give a formal and expensive look, and the back panel is canvas for optimum flexibility. Because of the design the bag has all the appearance of high quality luggage, but will not be very expensive.”
